PREFACE

Though the significance of environment in relation to an author's work is constantly manifest to students of literature, there has been at hand no facility for locating the places where literary genius has developed. To supply this lack the editors offer an Atlas of English Literature with the hope that it may enable students to visualize much that has hitherto been vague and confused.

The book should be useful in both elementary and advanced courses. Separate maps, each complete in itself and free from too great crowding of details, have been provided for the different periods of English literary history. In the lists have been included all the minor writers who might be of interest in detailed investigation of types or periods, while capitals have been adopted to indicate the outstanding authors who would probably be studied in a survey course. For chronological convenience five somewhat arbitrary divisions of the history of English literature have been made, not altogether conforming to the recognized periods of literary development. For example, in the Elizabethan and Puritan periods are included the fifty years of the Renaissance (1500-1550), which fell between the close of the Middle Ages and the accession of Elizabeth.

The general plan has been to give under the name of each writer the places associated with his life. These places have been arranged in the order, as far as it could be determined, of their connection with the life of the writer, except that to save complication all localities in London have been listed together. Where the places of birth and death are known these are indicated by the letters b. and d. before the names of the places. Where the place of burial is not the same as the place of death or a place of residence already cited, it has been noted by the abbreviation bur. The place of death has naturally been put last, although in many instances the person's life included also a former residence there.

In some cases, particularly with the churchmen of the earlier periods, it has been practically impossible to determine actual residence, for often a man held offices and dignities at different places at the same time. Unless the evidence pointed definitely to residence or other vital association, the place has not been included. Likewise places of temporary residence, unless they were of special importance in a writer's life or works, have been excluded, as have also places of mere schooling. We have endeavored to give the localities in London where authors maintained permanent residences in so far as these could be shown on the map without too much minuteness of detail. These London residences appear under the writers' names in the period lists as well as in the list for London, where the references to the map will be found. In the London list are included also places of general literary fame.

The writers of the entire field of Scottish literary history have been given in a single list, as have also those of Ireland. These lists contain as well those English writers who lived for a considerable time in either of these countries. The names of Scotch and Irish writers who resided in England will be found also in the English period lists to which they belong.

The list of authors who visited Italy has been made with a view to suggesting the very considerable influence of Italy upon the development of English literature, especially in the Humanistic, Romantic, and Oxford movements. Some insignificant writers have been omitted, and no effort has been made to give the name of every place to which literary men and women went. Rather we have tried to indicate the localities where the persons lived for a time or where, during even a very brief stay, they were perhaps influenced in their work. Even this purpose could not be adhered to closely, as it was impossible to omit the names of some who went to Italy seeking health after their writing was practically all done, such as Scott and Keats.

The lists for the different periods and the indexes of authors and places furnish a system of cross-references which should make the atlas very convenient. There are also cross-references between the list of writers who visited Italy and the period lists in which their names occur.

Difficulty has frequently been encountered in securing full information regarding the places connected with a writer's career, biographers themselves often failing to be explicit. For the purpose of a possible revision of this work later, we shall welcome from scholars who have made special study of authors or periods any additional information which they can supply.

The chief authorities followed in compiling the lists have been the Cambridge History of English Literature, the Encyclopædia Britannica, and the Dictionary of National Biography, though in many instances fuller biographies have been consulted. Other books which have been used are the following:

Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, Giles's Edition

Bede's Ecclesiastical History, Sellar's Edition

English Literature from the Norman Conquest to Chaucer, Schofield

The Catholic Encyclopedia

Historical Atlas, Shepherd

Atlas of European History, Dow

The Times Atlas of the World

The Atlas of the Century Encyclopedia

The Royal Atlas of England and Wales, Bartholomew

The Survey Atlas of Scotland, Bartholomew

Handy Atlas of the Counties of Scotland, Philips

Memorial Atlas of Ireland

London and its Environs, Baedeker

London and its Environs, Muirhead

A History of London, Loftie

Walks in London, Hare

London in English Literature, Boynton

Shakesperean Playhouses, Adams

We wish to acknowledge our special obligation to Mrs. E. F. Shannon for drawing the originals for the nine maps in the Atlas, for assistance in locating places, and for her careful attention to many details.

Thanks are also due to Professor B. A. Wooten of Washington and Lee University for making the first draft of the map of London; to Professor D. B. Easter of Washington and Lee University for valuable criticism; to Miss Blanche Prichard McCrum, librarian of Washington and Lee University, for co-operation throughout the preparation of the Atlas; and to Miss Marion Garnett Ryland, librarian of the University of Richmond, for kind assistance.

ANGLO-SAXON PERIOD, 449-1066

References in this list are to Map I.

As the Anglo-Saxon literature is so much more historical than that of any other period, it has been thought best to include a place-list giving the places, so far as the locations are known, which occur in the more important writings, as Bede's Ecclesiastical History and the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, as well as the places connected with the lives of the writers. Monasteries are indicated thus: ⚡

INDEX OF PLACES

The Roman numerals, I-VIII, below refer to the maps on which the places are to be found. The combinations, D4, E5, etc., represent squares on the maps made by the intersection of parallels of latitude and longitude. The figures following the names of authors give the pages, where these authors occur, in the lists of writers accompanying the several maps.
